Forbes Magazine

By Forbes Wealth Studies Department (2025)

I. Wealth Management in Mondatum, Finland and Italy

What is wealth management? It is a high financial bank handling wealth accounts and that reflects a high wealth life.

II. Interview with Mondatum – just a few insights

Mondatum – we manage wealthy lives only, we are Jewish.

Forbes – how can it explain wealth on Forbes list?

Mondatum – I argue if it reflects a sketch of architecture and high architecture like say Le Corbusier in living heights, it will be high, what is your point?

Forbes – we do statistics on high lives, is it just a personal account that matters and reflects it?

Mondatum – yes a personal account if rich is a rich life.

Forbes – why?

Mondatum – because the personal account or bank account is at a high level of wealthy life, compared to normal accounts. What is your point again? That Jewish fact that we live with companies and live high lives which is not always the case? That is because the personal accounts are high but they do not live it? That is because the personal accounts are not high actually, and that is because they do not accumulate a wealth management, and that is because they do not live high, or live it up actually, they work on normal accounts – about scholarship level at most. Nowadays they live at a Billion if they like. It is because the ideas have changed on freeing up life by a young son-in-law of Ferari.

Forbes – I thank you, so the richest do not live the richest, but they can and do now. I think a personal account reflects a high wealth management, and is not done usually, because as far as we know, it is not a option allowed in real life, it goes to the bank, but is not theirs. I see Brad Pitt getting a high pay and then is living high. If he gets a low pay he doesn’t live that well but is fine.

Mondatum – I argue it is richer now, way richer. Not a normal rich life either, ideas these days are Jewish, something like Coastal Spain to go for a tour. Earlier it would not be the case, I manage wealth this way is true. Ideas have gone higher. Earlier it would be low, and that is because of how unique that man is.